International Reserves Needs And Availability:

The Need for International Reserves and Credit Facilities J. de Beaufort Wijnholds, 2013-11-11 International monetary economics essentially deals with three problems viz the nature and stability of the international monetary system the balance of payments adjustment process and international liquidity reserves and credit facilities All three categories are interrelated The exchange rate system has an important bearing on the manner in which the adjustment process functions as well as on the need for international liquidity The adjustment process is an important determinant of the need for international liquidity The adequacy of international liquidity influences the working of the adjustment process Ultimately developments in international liquidity and in the adjustment process determine the nature and stability of the international monetary system a sustained malfunctioning of the adjustment process brought about by a serious imbalance in international liquidity or by other causes will bring about a new international monetary system either through collapse or reform of the old system This study deals only with the problem of international liquidity However it touches on the two other main aspects of international monetary economics insofar as they have a bearing on international reserves and credit facilities In the literature international liquidity is most often defined as including international reserves gold SDRs foreign exchange and claims on the IMF and international credit facilities IMF drawing rights EEC support arrangements and central bank multilateral and bilateral credit facilities This definition will also be followed in this study The Need for International Reserves United States. Department of the Treasury, 1967 IMF Staff Papers, Volume 51, No. 1 International Monetary Fund. Research Dept., 2004-04-20 This first issue of Volume 51 for 2004 includes a new paper by Peter B Clark and Jacques J Polak along with a tribute from the Editor to Mr Polak in honor of his 90th birthday This issue also launches a new featured section Data Issues which will be devoted in future issues to on going discussions of the latest in econometric and statistical tools for economists data puzzles and other related topics of interest to researchers The International Monetary System and the Less Developed Countries Graham Bird, 1982-10-28 In this book the author investigates the relationship between the international monetary system and the less developed countries of the world In the period since 1945 growing concern has been shown over the international monetary problems which LDCs face and since 1971 LDCs have been significant participants in the reform of the international monetary system After tracing the evolution of the relationship between LDCs and the International Monetary Fund the book goes on to examine with full reference to the available empirical evidence the major causes and consequences of LDCs international monetary problems Topics covered include export instability the terms of trade the demand for reserves and reserve adequacy and adjustment difficulties A thorough examination is then made of the ways in which financial assistance has been provided to LDCs through the IMF and the Eurocurrency market Finally certain key policy issues are discussed the commodity problem the link between the creation of international liquidity and the provision of development aid and exchange rate policy Each chapter is followed by an extensive bibliography which is designed to help the reader to pursue further any topic of particular interest The presentation which is non mathematical is in the form of a textbook The issues are surveyed the main arguments discussed and the available empirical evidence presented It is revealed however that on many issues it is at present difficult to draw firm conclusions The book will be of interest to students of international monetary and development economics The Need for International Reserves George Hatheway Willis, Fred L.
