

Le Marmure

Journal

In order to create an event space, the French creative studio Marmure found its inspiration in nature through typography and created the Marmure typeface. Together with Jeremy Lubbock, a creative typographer, artists, chefs, photographers, designers and stylists, they have been able to create and complemented by various studio variations, including a typographic "M" and "F". The result is a collection of ten sets of studio design for the Marmure that range from an elegant, subtle, minimalist aesthetic to a more vibrant, playful style. The studio's design work is a blend of typography and visual language, creating a unique aesthetic of experimentation, research and creativity. Marmure work, the first creative collaboration, began in 2011 and continues to evolve with new digital variations and diverse studio design in an ever-evolving, fast-paced studio, always pushing the boundaries through a creative process, in both digital and print media.

Interview by Alex Gray

How do you think you've developed together, the two of you? The French creative studio Marmure is a combination of the French studio Marmure and the UK studio Jeremy Lubbock. The studio is a blend of typography and visual language, creating a unique aesthetic of experimentation, research and creativity. Marmure work, the first creative collaboration, began in 2011 and continues to evolve with new digital variations and diverse studio design in an ever-evolving, fast-paced studio, always pushing the boundaries through a creative process, in both digital and print media.
