method of determining the winner and loser of an ice hockey match when the scores are tied after regulation The two main methods are the overtime period commonly referred to as overtime and the shootout Overtime periods are extra periods beyond the third regulation period during a game where normal hockey rules apply Although in the past full length overtime periods were played overtimes today are sudden death meaning that the game ends immediately when a player scores a goal For the 1983 84 season the NHL introduced a regular season overtime period of five minutes compared to the twenty minutes of regulation periods If the five minute overtime period ended with no scoring the game was a tie The World Hockey Association had used a 10 minute regular season overtime period as had the NHL prior to World War II In 1987 88 and since 1995 the American Hockey League has awarded teams one point in the standings for an overtime loss OTL In 1998 the AHL introduced a rule where teams will play the five minute overtime period with four skaters and a goaltender rather than at full strength five skaters except in two man advantage situations In a two man advantage situation the team with the advantage will play with five skaters The rule was popular and adopted by the NHL and ECHL the next season Mats Sundin Sergei
