was as long as a woman's youth was long. However, this man whom she had loved for eleven years saw her as a malignant tumor that was filled with torture. She finally understood that in marriage there were no differences between good and bad men. There were only those who treated you well and those who treated you badly. No matter how good he was if he didn't love her, then he didn't. She only sang a one-man show. A few years later, she came over for a divorce with her lover on her arm, only to be mocked by him in a cold voice: "Do you think that you can just pull a man on the street and be my son's cheap father?" Divorce. Give up.
