The Fagan Sisters Elinor Mettler, 1999-05 The Fagan Sisters speaks of life in a county village in upstate New York Sally and Agnes Fagan were born in the village of Copake Falls and lived there through almost all of the 20th century Their experiences however were not confined to that village located about 50 miles south of Albany near the Massachusetts and Connecticut borders Even in their childhood they frequently traveled by horse and buggy or train to visit relatives in neighboring states The sisters talk about their people who left Ireland during the famine of the mid 1800s arrived in the rural area and found work in the mines and later on the railroads They reminisce about their own school days their wide circle of friends and their simple and more elegant pleasures They recall their first years as teachers in the classroom where they experienced the prejudice that existed against Irish Catholics at that time
