Heraldry for Craftsmen and Designers W. St. John Hope, 2016-08-14 This book is an attempt to place before designers and craftsmen such an account of the principles of the art of Heraldry as will enable them to work out for themselves the many and various applications of it that are possible to day To that end the different usages which have prevailed from time to time are dealt with in detail and are illustrated as far as may be from ancient sources Should it be thought that undue stress has been laid upon the pre Tudor heraldry to the comparative exclusion of that of later times it may be pointed out that until the principles of the earlier heraldry have been grasped and appreciated it is impossible to get rid of the cast iron uniformity and stupid rules that bound the heraldry of to day and tend to strangle all attempts to raise it to a higher level To what extent these chilling ideas prevail and how necessary it is to get rid of them cannot better be illustrated than by two letters written to the author after most of the following chapters were in type by a critical friend who has not read any of them He points out in his first letter that on the very day of his writing there had been brought to his notice not for the first time the great need that exists for a book in which sculptors and painters may find out what they legitimately may and what they may not do as regards heraldry What for example may be left out from an achievement of arms and how the different elements composing it may be varied or even rearranged He instances the case of a sculptor who had been supplied with a drawing brilliant in emerald green and powder blue of the arms that had been granted to a famous Englishman whose memory was about to be honoured by the setting up of a statue with his arms etc carved upon the pedestal The arms in the drawing did not present any difficulties but the crest was not shown upon the helm and the whole was surrounded by a series of trophies which to this unenlightened sculptor were as heraldic as the arms and crest Out of all this asked the sculptor what could lawfully be omitted If any of the trophies were supporters must they be shown And must the crest be used Ought the crest to be on a helm And should the helm be shown in profile or full faced The contents of the drawing if all were sculptured would in my friend's opinion either come so small as to be unmonumental or so large as to dwarf the statue into a doll It will be seen from the principles enunciated in the present work that the answers to the foregoing questions were obviously as follows I That the sculptor might use the arms alone if he thought fit and he might vary the shape and size of the shield according to his fancy II That he could omit the crest if he wished but if he elected to use it the crest ought certainly to be set upon a helm which should face the same way as the crest the crested helm might also be flourished about with such mantling as the sculptor thought proper III That in the particular drawing none of the trophies was heraldic The sculptor accordingly could omit the whole if he were so minded or could dispose about the arms and crested helm any such other trophies of like character as would in his judgment look well or be appropriate
