and the homes of ordinary citizens to explore how postwar civil defense turned the front lawn into the front line The reliance on atomic weaponry as a centerpiece of U S foreign policy cast a mushroom cloud over everyday life American citizens now had to imagine a new kind of war one in which they were both combatants and targets It was the Federal Civil Defense Administration's job to encourage citizens to adapt to their nuclear present and future As McEnaney demonstrates the creation of a civil defense program produced new dilemmas about the degree to which civilian society should be militarized to defend itself against internal and external threats Conflicts arose about the relative responsibilities of state and citizen to fund and implement a home front security program The defense establishment's resolution was to popularize and privatize military preparedness The doctrine of self help defense demanded that citizens become autonomous rather than rely on the federal government for protection Families would reconstitute themselves as paramilitary units that could quash subversion from within and absorb attack from without Because it solicited an unprecedented degree of popular involvement the FCDA offers a unique opportunity to explore how average citizens community leaders and elected officials both participated in and resisted the creation of the national security state Drawing on a wide variety of archival sources McEnaney uncovers the broad range of responses to this militarization of daily life and reveals how government planners and ordinary people negotiated their way at the dawn of the atomic age Her work sheds new light on the important postwar debate about what total military preparedness would actually mean for American society
