House on Wheels: A Trip to the Mountain of Mystery Victor Appleton,2011-01-01 Tom Swift with a negative shake of his head shoved several papers across the table that separated him from a burly red faced man whose eyes narrowly observed the young inventor Then you refuse this contract Mr Swift a contract for constructing over one hundred thousand dollars worth of machinery on which you can make a handsome profit You absolutely refuse it The red faced man in his eagerness was leaning forward now Yes Mr Cunningham I refuse was Tom s crisp answer The Swift Construction Company does not care to handle it Mr Barton Swift father of the young man who thus calmly turned down what seemed like a good business proposition nodded in affirmation of what his son had said Is that your last word asked Basil Cunningham who plainly showed his English ancestry not only in his face and figure but in his general bearing and manner This refusal is final he inquired Quite final and complete answered Tom as he added another document to the pile of those he had pushed toward his visitor
They were blue prints specifications and contract forms but they all went across the table The matter is closed But look here I say now and Mr Cunningham began to wax excited not to say wroth I can t understand Do you mean to say you don t understand English asked Mr Swift and the smile on the face of the aged inventor took away whatever sting there might otherwise have been in the words I thought my son spoke very plainly He said no and that s what he means But look here Mr Swift Do you agree with him Absolutely And you won t consider the contracts further The matter is closed I told you and Tom Swift s voice was a bit sharp now With an imperious gesture the burly Englishman gathered up his papers and began to stuff them into a leather brief case bulging with other documents If possible the red of his face deepened Well he began of all the Tom Swift looked up sharply He was on the verge of saying something that he himself admitted he might later have been sorry for when the door of the private office opened and a veritable giant of a man fairly squeezed his way through the doorway What is it Koku asked Tom not quite pleased with such an interruption at this time Excuse Master murmured the foreign giant whose struggle with a strange tongue sometimes got the best of him But new engine him have come an Mr Jackson say him got to be lift up so I lift if you want As if to demonstrate his strength the giant put one finger under the edge of the heavy table around which the three men sat and with as much ease as if he were lifting a feather tilted it My word man Don t do that cried Mr Cunningham for one of his feet was close to the leg of the table and he evidently feared the weight would come down on his toes when Koku let go Don t worry said Tom with a smile Koku won t drop it Fascinated by this remarkable exhibition of strength by which the giant raised several hundred pounds on one finger the Englishman started to move from his proximity to Koku But there was no need of alarm though the timely entrance of Tom Swift s gigantic henchman had evidently stopped a tirade that was on the lips of the visitor That will do Koku said Tom in a low voice I will see Mr Jackson shortly and look at the new engine Yes Master murmured the giant whose whisper however was a hoarse bellow in contrast with others Koku took himself out and Cunningham staring at the closed door as though he could not believe what he had seen continued to stuff his rejected contracts into his case I m sorry about this said the Englishman in more subdued tones than he had used before the advent of Koku I m not only sorry but I m disappointed and I think I haven t been fairly treated His anger was rising again that was evident
