This is the latest edition of a stalwart textbook for teaching English for Academic Purposes (EAP). It is a stand-alone volume, unlike many EAP books that have become a series differentiated by stages of student ability (for example, the Oxford EAP series or Longman Academic Writing). The advantage is that Bailey's textbook accompanies the student through their courses, from beginner to advanced, rather than requiring several separate books. The book is systematic and thorough, with varied examples of material, and it is broken into logical sections and subsections like a science or engineering textbook. The emphasis is on students practicing and completing writing throughout, rather than a more theoretical approach.

'Part 1 - The Writing Process', explores how academic writing occurs, from what distinguishes academic writing from other types of writing, through finding appropriate sources through reading (part 1.2), to developing a critical stance towards those sources (part 1.3). Avoiding plagiarism is dealt with early on (part 1.4), as are key issues such as: understanding essay titles and planning (part 1.5); locating key points and taking effective notes (part 1.6); summarising and paraphrasing (part 1.7); and referencing and quotations (part 1.8). It then examines the structure of writing, such as organising paragraphs (part 1.10), as well as a crucial problem for many students, writing introductions and conclusions (part 1.11). The all-important issue of rewriting and proofreading (part 1.12) is something that will make a significant difference to student work but is one students seldom believe to be accurate.

It is clear from my summary that each section of Part 1, moves from a beginner to an advanced level of EAP, which a teacher needs to consider. The other parts of the book are similarly detailed. Part 2, 'Elements of Writing', covers how writing can define, generalise, compare, and discuss. Part 3, 'Language Issues', deals with problematic areas of academic language, including punctuation and the passive voice. Part 4, 'Vocabulary for Writing', may be particularly useful for beginners. Part 5 'Writing Models', examines the many genres of academic writing from reports to essays to literature reviews. This is an area where I think the book needed
