

John Hancock was president of the Second Continental Congress and the first delegate to sign the Declaration of Independence. He wrote his name clearly in large letters. He said, "King George will be able to read the signature his opponent!"

His signature became so famous that "John Hancock" has become another name for signature.

The Declaration of Independence

Independence

To most Americans, it was a beautiful word, but a frightening one. They wanted freedom. But how could they cut their ties of friendship with, and loyalty to, Britain—the Mother Country?

When the Second Continental Congress gathered in Philadelphia on May 10, 1775, many delegates still hoped to avoid war. They drafted the Olive Branch Petition—an appeal to King George from "his Majesty's faithful subjects in the Colonies." It was a final attempt to solve the problems between America and Britain peacefully.

But the king refused even to receive the Olive Branch Petition. Instead, he announced that the colonies were in a state of rebellion, and declared his forces for war.

Congress also began preparing for war. Because the colonial militia weren't strong enough to meet the British army, Congress authorized the creation of a regular army. And it appointed George Washington "General and Commander-in-Chief of the forces raised and to be raised in defense of American Liberty."

Then the question of independence was discussed. Samuel Adams asked, "Is not America already independent? Why not, then, declare it?" Most delegates agreed with him.

After a long debate, Congress appointed a committee to write a Declaration of Independence. The Declaration was actually written by Thomas Jefferson, who later became the third president of the United States.

Thomas Jefferson wrote the Declaration of Independence in two weeks. He studied standing at his writing desk, which was set on a high stile.

Americans had high hopes for the Second Continental Congress. In fact, delegates from Connecticut rode through New York on their way to the meeting just "in a p. . . . It was up to us to bring them there, and the horses and pulled the carriage through." — Journal of the Continental Congress
