Lauzon, 2010-12-01 How do people use education to respond to change How do people learn what is expected of good citizens in their communities These questions have long concerned educational historians civic educators and social scientists In recent years they have captured national attention through high profile education reform proposals and civic initiatives The historian who reviews the relevant literature however will discover something odd most of it focuses on schooling despite the fact that prior to the middle of the twentieth century formal schooling played only a small but significant part in most people's lives What other educational forces and institutions bring civic ideals to bear upon minds and hearts This question is rarely raised At issue is a conceptual problem we today tend to equate education with schooling Do county fairs and farmers associations have anything to do with civic education Drawing insights from debates at the time of the founding of the history of education as a branch of modern scholarship this author asserts that they do Using the life of county fairs farmers associations and farmers institutes as its central thread this book explores how prominent town dwellers and leading farmers tried to use agricultural improvement to grow towns and to shape civic sensibilities in the rural Midwest Promoting economic development was the foremost concern but the efforts taught farmers much about their place as good citizens of industrializing communities As such this study yields insights into how rural people of the nineteenth century came to accept the ideal that town and country were interdependent parts of the same community In doing so it reminds educators and historians that much education and learning particularly of the civic sort takes place beyond the schoolhouse
