

Why Do Cats Sit On Your Chest?

So why do cats sit on your chest? Well, there are many reasons for this. Here are some reasons for your reference.

Warm-Up

If your pet sits on your body during the winter season, you may want to think it could be cold. When they are too hot, they often like to find cool surfaces and sit for a while because they prefer cooler surfaces.

A panting cat will also be looking for a cool surface to lower their body temperature due to higher temperatures typically playing a part in making them anxious.

Perhaps this is why many do not do well with the heat and sun exposure so much that a room with air conditioning or fan running would be a better option.

If your cat wants to spend time on your lap, it may potentially have a fever or feels warm from being too hot – this can explain why your cat might even need more attention if you're feeding time
