In this diagram, which is partly cut away to reveal otherwise hidden pieces, the keel is shown at A, knee at B, rib C, stem D, inwale E, breast-hook F, gunwale G, fashion-piece H, beam J, top-rail K, bulwarks L, and knight-head M.

FIG. 55.

Names of Components of a Built Model Hull.

The only really practicable way to learn how to make a planked hull is to make one, and for a first essay in construction a little model in cardboard is economical, and while not exactly the same conditions are met as where working in wood, it will be found in practice that a few evenings spent on this work will teach more than anything else, and the practical experience is well worth having.

FIG. 56.

Clips Hull built up from Cardboard.

The underlying requirements of any form of built hull are a central frame or keel, disposed length-ways, a series of shaped members or ribs arranged at right angles to the central member, and a stiffener or two in the form of longitudinals.
