How to get my resume, cover letter, and interview in short steps.

How to Get Hired at Google: Building the Resume

The resume is the most critical aspect of applying for any job. It helps in the preliminary assessment of your conformity with the open position. It is a tool in your hand that can either get you shortlisted for the initial screening or get you rejected.

So what can you do to make your resume represent the real you and get shortlisted?

- Keep your resume length limited to a single page.
- Use a readable font like Calibri, Arial, and Times New Roman, and keep the size 10-12 points.
- Mention your contact details, email, and tailor-made resume objective at the top.
- If you do not have any experience, put your education first. If you have experience, you can keep the education section after work experience.
- List your experience in reverse chronological order and mention your duties and accomplishments.
- Include keywords in your resume from the job description to show relevant skills for the job.
