

The background of the poster is a composite image. At the top, a man's face is shown in profile, looking down with a serious expression. Below him, a biplane flies across a dark, stormy sky. In the foreground, a large, ancient stone structure, resembling the Parthenon, sits atop a hill. The overall color palette is dark and moody, with a mix of blues, greys, and warm, golden-brown tones from the ancient ruins and the sky's glow.

Crawford,2018-02-09 Ever since we started huddling together in communities the story of human history has been inextricably entwined with the story of microbes They have evolved and spread amongst us shaping our culture through infection disease and pandemic At the same time our changing human culture has itself influenced the evolutionary path of microbes Dorothy H Crawford here shows that one cannot be truly understood without the other Beginning with a dramatic account of the SARS pandemic at the start of the 21st century she takes us back in time to follow the interlinked history of microbes and man taking an up to date look at ancient plagues and epidemics and identifying key changes in the way humans have lived such as our move from hunter gatherer to farmer to city dweller which made us vulnerable to microbe attack Showing how we live our lives today with increasing crowding and air travel puts us once again at risk Crawford asks whether we might ever conquer microbes completely or whether we need to take a more microbe centric view of the world Among the possible answers one thing becomes clear that for generations to come our deadly companions will continue to shape human history Oxford Landmark Science books are must read classics of modern science writing which have crystallized big ideas and shaped the way we think Army ,1985 Sustaining the Force United States.
