John Ralph,John R. Sauer,Sam Droege,1998-05 Point counts of birds are the most widely used quantitative method and involve an observer recording birds from a single point for a standardized time period In response to the need for standardization of methods to monitor bird populations by census researchers met to present data from various investigations working under a wide variety of conditions and to examine various aspects of point count methodology Statistical aspects of sampling and analysis were discussed and applied to the objectives of point counts The final chapter presents these standards and their applications to point count methodology

Fuller,1987 Special Report ,1995 Publications from Northern Prairie Wildlife Research Center, 1965-1982 Northern Prairie Wildlife Research Center,1983 Repeatability of Riparian Vegetation Sampling Methods ,2004
Tests were conducted to evaluate variability among observers for riparian vegetation data collection methods and data reduction techniques The methods are used as part of a largescale monitoring program designed to detect changes in riparian resource conditions on Federal lands Methods were evaluated using agreement matrices the Bray Curtis dissimilarity metric the coefficient of variation the percentage of total variability attributed to observers and estimates of the number of sites needed to detect change Community type CT cover data differed substantially among the six to seven observers that sampled the same sites The mean within site similarity in the vegetation data ranged from 40 to 65 percent Converting CT data to ratings bank stability successional and wetlands ratings resulted in better repeatability with coefficients of variation ranging from 6 to 13 percent and a percentage of variability attributed to observers of 16 to 44 percent Sample size estimates for the ratings generated from CT cover data ranged from 56 to 224 sites to detect a change of 10 percent between two populations The woody species regeneration method was imprecise The effective ground cover method was quite precise with a coefficient of variation of two but had so little variability among sites that statistically significant change in this attribute would not be expected In general reducing the CTs to ratings increased precision because of the elimination of differences among observers that were not important from the perspective of the rating Studies that seek to detect change at a single site would need to take into account the observer variability described here Studies that seek to detect differences between populations of sites could detect relatively large changes with these methods and ratings Small differences among populations would be difficult to detect with a high degree of confidence unless hundreds of sites were sampled Publications - Pacific Southwest Forest and Range Experiment Station Pacific Southwest Forest and Range Experiment Station (Berkeley, Calif.),1979 Publications Quarterly List ,1967 Publications ,1981 DESIGN J.
