Graves Gate A Novel Of Possession:

At His Gates A Novel Vol. I-III Mrs Oliphant, 2018-08-27 Excerpt Mr and Mrs Robert Drummond lived in a pretty house in the Kensington district a house the very external aspect of which informed the passer by who they were or at least what the husband was The house was embowered in its little garden and in spring with its lilacs and laburnums looked like a great bouquet of bloom as such houses often do But built out from the house and occupying a large slice of the garden at the side was a long room lighted with sky windows and not by any means charming to look at outside though the creepers which had not long been planted were beginning to climb upon the walls It was connected with the house by a passage which acted as a conservatory and was full of flowers and everything had been done that could be done to render the new studio as beautiful in aspect as it was in meaning But it was new and had scarcely yet begun as its proprietor said to compose with its surroundings Robert Drummond accordingly was a painter a painter producing in the mean time pictures of the class called genre but intending to be historical and to take to the highest school of art as soon as life and fame would permit He was a very good painter his subjects were truly felt and exquisitely manipulated but there was no energy of emotion no originality of genius about them A great many people admired them very much other painters lingered over them lovingly with that true professional admiration of good work which counteracts the jealousy of trade in every honest mind They were very saleable articles indeed and had procured a considerable amount of prosperity for the young painter It was almost certain that he would be made an Associate at the next vacancy and an Academician in time But with all this he was well aware that he was no genius and so was his wife Albemarle ,2003 The Grave Digger.
