An Introduction to Geographical Economics Steven Brakman, Harry Garretsen, Charles van Marrewijk, 2001-12-06
The need for a better understanding of the role location plays in economic life was first and most famously made explicit by Bertil Ohlin in 1933. However, it is only recently with the development of computer packages able to handle complex systems as well as advances in economic theory in particular an increased understanding of returns to scale and imperfect competition that Ohlin's vision has been met and a framework developed which explains the distribution of economic activity across space. This book is an integrated non-mathematical first principles textbook presenting geographical economics to advanced students. Never avoiding advanced concepts, its emphasis is on examples, diagrams, and empirical evidence, making it the ideal starting point prior to monographic and journal material. Contains copious computer simulation exercises available in book and electronic format to encourage learning and understanding through application. Uses case study material from North America, Europe, Africa, and Australasia.

The New Introduction to Geographical Economics Steven Brakman, Harry Garretsen, Charles van Marrewijk, 2009-04-09
Geographical economics starts from the observation that economic activity is clearly not randomly distributed across space. This revised and updated introduction to geographical economics uses the modern tools of economic theory to explain the who, why, and where of the location of economic activity. The text provides an integrated first principles introduction to geographical economics for advanced undergraduate students and first year graduate students and has been thoroughly revised and updated to reflect important developments in the field, including new chapters on alternative core models and policy implications. It presents a truly global analysis of issues in geographical economics using case studies from all over the world, including North America, Europe, Africa, and Australasia, and contains many computer simulations and end of chapter exercises to encourage learning and understanding through application.

International Regional Economic Integration and the Development of China's Borderland Economies Shuanglu Liang, 2024-07-31
China's borderland economy has grown significantly recently, thanks largely to a favorable institutional environment created by national strategies such as the development of the western part of China, revitalization of old industrial bases in the northeast, and the anti-poverty campaign. This work draws on theories of international economics and spatial economics to study the regional economic integration of China's border areas with the aim of shedding light on how to improve policies and practices. It discusses topics such as the transformation of border trade, industrial upgrading, and urbanization in borderlands, especially in the context of cross-border economic integration. Furthermore, the book also explores ways in which changes in the border might contribute to the formation of peripheral economic growth centers and related environmental, institutional, and policy issues. It will interest scholars of Asian economic trends and the rise of China, particularly in Southeast Asia.

Hertel, Steven K. Rose, Richard S. J. Tol, 2009-05-07. Land has long been overlooked in economics. That is now changing. A substantial part of the solution to the climate crisis may lie in growing crops for fuel and using trees for storing carbon. This book investigates the potential of these options to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, estimates the costs to the economy and analyses the trade offs with growing food. The first part presents new databases that are necessary to underpin policy relevant research in the field of climate change while describing and critically assessing the underlying data, the methodologies used and the first applications. Together the new data and the extended models allow for a thorough and comprehensive analysis of a land use and climate policy. This book outlines key empirical and analytical issues associated with modelling land use and land use change in the context of global climate change policy. It places special emphasis on the economy wide competition for land and other resources especially the implications of changes in land use for the cost of climate change mitigation. Land use change as a result of mitigation and feedback from changes in the global climate to land use. By offering synthesis and evaluation of a variety of different approaches to this challenging field of research, this book will serve as a key reference for future work in the economic analysis of land use and climate change policy. Applied quantitative and experimental methods to provide a clear insight in the determinants of country choices of international NGOs. The book aims to discover the country choices of international NGOs how they are determined and how they could be improved. This work which uses a dataset created specifically for the research comes to the conclusion that international NGOs do not target the poorest and most difficult countries. They are shown to be focussing mostly on those countries where their back donors are active. Additionally it was discovered that they tend to cluster their activities for example international NGOs also have their donor darlings and their donor orphans. Their clustering is explained by adapting theories that explain concentration in for profit actors to the non profit context. The book is the first on the geographic choices of international NGOs and is therefore of considerable academic interest especially for those focusing on development aid and third sector research. Furthermore the book provides specific policy suggestions for more thought out geographic decisions of international NGOs and their back donors.
