COURSE DESCRIPTION

Organizations are all around you. Some have helped shaped who you are. Others may influence you more indirectly by shaping the world you live in. And you, in turn, have a role to play in shaping them. That role will become increasingly important as you gain professional experience and eventually take on greater leadership responsibilities.

The better you are equipped to take on that role of shaping the organizations around you, the greater an impact you can have through your actions. Management involves helping a group of people within an organization to achieve common goals that they can't (or wouldn't want to) accomplish on their own. This course will teach you how to formulate those goals and implement strategies for attaining them.

The course is organized into three modules, each of which covers three key areas of management. In the first module, we study how organizations adapt their strategies to the external, competitive environment, namely through industry positioning, building a competitive advantage and corporate diversification. In the second module, we then look at what goes on inside the organization, in terms of organizational culture, teams, and networks. Finally, the third module explores connections between the internal and external environment, through the lens of three contemporary societal issues that are key to organizational growth and success: innovation, globalization, and corporate social responsibility.

Thus, in the first two modules, we "drill down" from the more macro- to the more micro-level of analysis (in other words, from larger to smaller scale questions and concepts) to better understand the management challenges of each; we then connect issues and concepts across levels of analysis in the third module, to demonstrate the synergies between them. The course will thus provide a roadmap to the different areas within the discipline of management and help you bring them together to solve managerial problems.
