Making Government Work United States. Congress. Office of Technology Assessment, 1993 This report published in its entirety OTA TCT 578 and in a summary form OTA TCT 579 containing only the first chapter of the complete report focuses on key topics and issues that are central to the successful use of electronic delivery by government The review conducted by the Office of Technology Assessment concludes that the movement toward electronic delivery of government services is accelerating but that many factors must be considered The greatest risks of electronic delivery are overlooking the human element and users needs which would further widen the gap between the technologically literate and the technologically illiterate and failing to capitalize on all the opportunities that partnerships among government agencies and the private sector could provide Changes that will be required in federal management are outlined and options for successful implementation of electronic delivery are sketched Many rely on the amplification of existing structures Five appendixes complement the complete report including a list of the 11 boxes 5 figures and 22 tables that illustrate the discussion and lists of acronyms and terms contributors field study participants and contractor reports The summary volume contains four tables and two boxes SLD

Department for Work and Pensions Great Britain: Parliament: House of Commons: Committee of Public Accounts,2013-06-19 On its own the number of people who stop claiming benefits is a flawed measure of how effective jobcentres are The DWP needs to be clear how it will measure the performance of jobcentres under Universal Credit and understand what happens to claimants The Department needs this information to see whether its interventions are achieving a long term reduction in the number claiming benefits At present 40 per cent of individuals reclaim benefit within 6 months with 60 per cent reclaiming within 2 years Claimants who don t look for work should face consequences But there is a risk that sanctions unfairly penalize the most vulnerable claimants particularly those with mental health problems Those at risk of sanctions should be given a written warning The Department also needs to monitor by claimant group and jobcentre how many claimants are being penalized Information is needed on how different jobcentres are managing their caseloads so that good practice can be identified and disseminated Local flexibility also opens up the possibility that harder to help claimants such as those with disabilities get parked The Department needs to look closely at its ability to support disabled claimants particularly given that these groups suffer poor outcomes under the Work Programme Jobcentres will have to cater for new claimant groups as a consequence of the introduction of Universal Credit People will also increasingly manage benefit claims and job searches online Some claimants will inevitably struggle which will increase the burden on third parties such as libraries and Citizens Advice which are themselves under severe pressure
