Letters From Wupatki:

Letters from Wupatki Courtney Reeder Jones,1995 When David and Courtney Reeder Jones moved into two rooms reached by ladder in a northern Arizona Indian ruin they had been married only two weeks Except for the ruin s cement floors which were originally hardened mud and skylights instead of smokeholes the rooms were exactly as they had been 800 years before The year was 1938 and the newlyweds had come to Wupatki National Monument as full time National Park Service caretakers for the ruin Remote in time and place their story as described in Courtney s letters will take readers into a dramatic landscape of red rocks purple volcanoes and endless blue sky Here some 60 years ago two young people came to terms with their new life together and with their nearly total reliance upon each other and their Navajo neighbors They helped us in any way that a neighbor would and we helped them as we could wrote Courtney in her memoirs years later Vivid and engaging her letters home spill over with descriptions of their friendship with local Navajo families their sings and celebrations and her good luck in being able to be a part of it all Letters from Wupatki captures a more innocent era in southwestern archaeology and the history of the National Park Service before the post war years brought paved roads expanded park facilities and ever increasing crowds of visitors Courtney s letters to her family and friends reflect all the charm of the earlier time as they convey the sense of rapid transition that came after the war Tracking those changes in the development of Wupatki National Monument and the National Park Service the letters also and perhaps more important reveal changes in the Joneses themselves Of particular interest to anthropologists and historians their story also gives the general reader captivating glimpses of a partnership between two people who only grew stronger for the struggles they shared together

The Return of the Viking Susan Newark,2007 A New Deal for Navajo Weaving Jennifer McLerran,2022-05-10 A New Deal for Navajo Weaving provides a detailed history of early to mid twentieth century Din weaving projects by non Natives who sought to improve the quality and marketability of Navajo weaving but in so doing failed to understand the cultural significance of weaving and its role in the lives of Din women By the 1920s the durability and market value of Din weavings had declined dramatically Indian welfare advocates established projects aimed at improving the materials and techniques Private efforts served as models for federal programs instituted by New Deal administrators Historian Jennifer McLerran details how federal officials developed programs such as the Southwest Range and Sheep Breeding Laboratory at Fort Wingate in New Mexico and the Navajo Arts and Crafts Guild Other federal efforts included the publication of Native natural dye recipes the publication of portfolios of weaving designs to guide artisans and the education of consumers through the exhibition of weavings aiding them in their purchases and cultivating an upscale market McLerran details how government officials sought to use these programs to bring the Din into the national economy instead these federal tactics were ineffective because they marginalized Navajo women and ignored the important role weaving plays in the resilience and endurance of wider Din culture
