Rao, 2012-12-06 The contemplation of truth and beauty is the proper object for which we were created which calls forth the most intense desires of the soul and of which it never tires Hazlitt In his Nobel lecture Purcell commented that when he saw snow in New England after the discovery of NMR it appeared like heaps of protons quietly precessing in earth s magnetic field If he were to make the comment in the context of how NMR is being used today he could have conjured up an image of hydrogen carbon and nitrogen nuclei in proteins of an earthbound organism subtly orchestrating a quiet symphony of frequencies from 150 Hz to 2 kHz carrying clues to the three dimensional structure of the macromolecules The manner in which the basic discoveries of Bloch and Purcell have led to the emergence of NMR several decades later as a major technique of biological and medical physics and chemistry is a striking example of the power of basic research It is also a fascinating saga whereby whenever it was felt that the field had reached a plateau new directions new technologies and sometimes serendipity produced new developments that revolutionized the technique and enhanced its capability As Richard Ernst points out NMR is intellectually attractive the practical importance of NMR is enormous and can justify much of the playful activities of an addicted spectroscopist Nobel lecture
