HEC-3, Reservoir System Analysis for Conservation ,1981      HEC-3 Reservoir System Analysis for Conservation. Users Manual ,1981 This program is the fourth generation of a program originally developed in 1965 1966 at The Hydrologic Engineering Center by Mr Leo R Beard Since the initial version was issued many modifications have been made to increase the capability of the program and the program has undergone extensive testing The primary modification incorporated into the version described herein is a complete revision of the input structure The primary purposes of modifying the input structure were to simplify input preparation and to facilitate changes in input required for sensitivity studies and studies of alternative system configurations The program simulates the operation of a reservoir system for such conservation purposes as water supply navigation recreation low flow augmentation and hydroelectric power While flood control operations can be handled in some respects a more complete simulation is possible using HEC 5 Reservoir System Operation for Flood Control The program can accept any configuration of reservoirs diversions powerplants and stream control points Economic values can be computed for meeting selected targets      HEC-3 Reservoir System Analysis for Conservation ,1974      HEC-3 Reservoir System Analysis for Conservation. Programmers Manual ,1976 This program performs a multipurpose routing of flows in a reservoir system for up to twelve periods of uniform or varying length per year based on varying flow requirements at reservoirs diversions and downstream control points Power peaking and energy requirements at reservoirs can be accommodated The program can accept any nonlooping configuration of reservoirs diversions power plants and requirements but does not provide for channel routings i e attenuation of flows in river channels or percolation losses It can assign economic values to all outputs and summarize and allocate these in various ways It can automatically iterate to optimize yield at a specified location The flexibility of input and output requirements and of computation techniques enable the program to solve relatively simple problems with minimum effort or elaborate complex problems with a relatively high degree of accuracy The program is intended for use on a variety of computer systems and for this reason coding is in FORTRAN IV and adheres as much as possible to operations that are common to FORTRAN software available to practically all large computers      HEC-3 Reservoir System Analysis for Conservation ,1976      HEC-3 Hydrologic Engineering Center (U.S.),1976      HEC-3 Reservoir System Analysis Hydrologic Engineering Center (U.S.),1971      Reservoir System Analysis for Conservation Hydrologic Engineering Center (U.S.),1977      Developing and Managing a Comprehensive Reservoir Analysis Model Richard J. Willey,1983 A computer model capable of evaluating water quality conditions in large reservoir systems was recently developed by the Corps of Engineers The model Simulation of Flood Control and Conservation Systems Including Water Quality Analysis HEC 5Q provides a comprehensive water quantity model with fairly simple water quality routines The HEC 5Q can evaluate how to operate each reservoir in a system for the best overall regulation to meet both water quantity and water quality objectives at all points of interest in the system An overview is provided of the model capabilities and concepts regarding method of regulation analysis A maximum of eight water quality parameters can be analyzed These include water temperature a maximum of three conservative and three non conservative parameters and dissolved oxygen The planned future development and availability is discussed Author      HEC-5 Reservoir System Operation for Flood Control and
