Beginning Again David Ehrenfeld, 1993 Early in this volume David Ehrenfeld describes what prophecy really is Referring to the biblical prophets he says they were not the holy fortunetellers that the word prophet has come to signify The business of prophecy is not simply foretelling the future rather it is describing the present with exceptional truthfulness and accuracy Once this is done then it can be seen that broad aspects of the future have suddenly become apparent The twentieth century is drawing to a chaotic close amidst portents of unprecedented change and upheaval The unravelling of societies and civilizations and the destruction of nature march together linked a fact whose enormous significance is often lost In Beginning Again David Ehrenfeld has undertaken the difficult task of describing the present clearly enough to reveal the future Out of his broad vision emerges a glimpse of a new millennium a vision at once frightening and comforting a scene of great devastation and great rebuilding Ehrenfeld ranges far and wide to present a coherent vision of our relationship with Nature its many aspects and implications as our century opens into the next millennium Whether he is writing about the problem of loyalty to organizations rights versus obligations our over managed society the vanishing of established knowledge the failure of experts the triumph of dandelions Dr Seuss Edward Teller or the future of farming he is always concerned with the intricate interaction between technology and nature As in his classic book The Arrogance of Humanism Ehrenfeld never loses sight of our fatal love affair with the fantasy of control We now have no choice he argues but to transform the dream of control of progress from one of overweening hubris love of consumption and the idiot's goal of perpetual growth to one based on the inventive imitation of nature with its honesty beauty resilience and durability Few American writers and even fewer scientists can describe these timeless transcendent qualities of nature so well In Places the opening chapter David Ehrenfeld tells about nightly vigils he spent alone on the moonlit beach of Tortuguero watching giant sea turtles emerging from the sea to lay their eggs in the black sand where they were born I could watch the perfect white spheres falling he writes Falling as they have fallen for a hundred million years with the same slow cadence always shielded from the rain or stars by the same massive bulk with the beaked head and the same large myopic eyes rimmed with crusts of sand washed out by tears Minutes and hours days and months dissolve into eons I am on an Oligocene beach an Eocene beach a Cretaceous beach the scene is the same It is night the turtles are coming back always back I hear a deep hiss of breath and catch a glint of wet shell as the continents slide and crash the oceans form and grow
