Bookseller & Stationer and Office Equipment Journal ,1916 The Vanity Girl Compton MacKenzie,2022-08-10 With whatever romance one might be tempted to embellish the origin of Lonsdale Road on account of an architectural superiority to the streets around it would be fanciful merely for that to endow it with any influence upon the character of the people who live there Apart from a house where the drains are bad that has achieved the reputation of being haunted because the landlord prefers to let it stay empty rather than spend money on putting the drains in order Lonsdale Road possesses as unromantic a lot of residences as the most banal of West Kensington streets The nearest approach to a scandal is the way human beings and cats go courting in the lane at the end but since the former do not live in Lonsdale Road and the latter are not amenable to any ethical code administered by the police the residents do not feel the burden of a moral responsibility for their behavior Such a dignified road within seven minutes of the railway station had in the year 1881 made a strong appeal to Mr Gilbert Caffyn who having just been appointed assistant secretary to the Church of England Purity Society at the early age of twenty six with a salary of 150 a year was emboldened by his father s death and the inheritance of another 200 a year in brewery shares to persuade Miss Charlotte Doyle that their marriage was immediately feasible Mr Caffyn had been all the more anxious to press for a happy conclusion of a two years engagement because Mrs Doyle was showing every sign of imminent decease an event which would eliminate a traditionally unsatisfactory relationship and enrich her daughter with 300 a year of her own Mr Caffyn therefore sold a quarter of his shares purchased a ninety nine years lease of 17 Lonsdale Road the last house on the right hand side away from the growing traffic of West Kensington and got married If No 17 was nearest the railway it was also rather larger than the other houses an important consideration for the assistant secretary of the Church of England Purity Society who was bound to expect at least as many children as a clergyman Still for all its extra windows it was not a very large house and when in the year 1902 Mr Caffyn now secretary of the Church of England Purity Society with a salary of 400 a year looked at his wife his nine children his two servants and himself he wondered how they all managed to squeeze in He hoped that his wife who had been mercifully fallow for seven years would not have any more children though it might almost be easier to have more children than to provide for the rapid growing up of those he had already Why his eldest son Roland was twenty The question of his moving into cheap rooms to suit his position as the earner of a guinea a week at a branch bank had been mooted several times already and Mr Caffyn had been compelled to turn his study which he never used into a bedroom for him and his brother Cecil now a lanky schoolboy of fifteen rather than expose himself to the likelihood of having to supplement the bank clerk s salary from his own Then there was Norah who was eighteen but at this moment Mr Caffyn realized that he had only eight minutes to catch his train up to Blackfriars and the problem of Norah was put aside It was a hot morning in late September and he had long ceased to enjoy running to catch a train
