Barnett, 2006-12-07 Jonathan Swift was the subject of gossip and criticism in his own time concerning his relations with women and his representations of them in his writings For over twenty years he regarded Esther Johnson Stella as his most valuable friend yet he is reputed never to have seen her alone From his time to our own there has been speculation that the two were secretly married since their relationship seemed so inexplicable then and now For thirteen of the years that Swift seemed committed to Stella as the acknowledged woman in his life he maintained a clandestine but apparently also nonsexual relationship with another woman Esther Van Homrigh or Vanessa Jonathan Swift in the Company of Women looks again at these much examined relationships and at others that reveal Swift as a man who enjoyed the company of a number of women as pupils and as ministrants to his various needs Swift a man with a complex private life was also a writer whose satiric portraits of women could be unsparing While Swift often criticized women for frivolous pastimes and idle chatter his most notorious texts on women image their bodies as loathsome as he once wrote in a serious political tract a woman is a nauseous unwholesome carcass Such representations cross a line by showing a repugnance for women as a sex the biological other They have led not surprisingly to repeated charges of misogyny an issue that Jonathan Swift in the Company of Women addresses at some length This first book length treatment of Swift and women comprehensively examines Swift's attitude toward women in all their manifestations in his work and life as intimates acquaintances prot g s wives mothers nurses disobedient daughters young women who marry older men and finally as poets and critics The New and Complete Dictionary of the English Language John Ash,1795 Woman, the Actuality A.K. Pant, 2010-11-19 Marriage is not a moral sexual debauchment consented by the society instead it describes an ethical limit of morality in sexual relations beyond which the sexual relations are considered to be illicit or adultery Marriage is a great attempt to keep the society free from sexual debauchment by assigning one man for one lady and one lady for one man Marriage is not a compulsion instead it is a confession done with mutual consent to live a peaceful life devotedly with each other From the point of view of sexual relations marriage is a factor which distinguishes human from animals It is sacred tribute to ancestors It is an indication of family succession or genealogy Marriage is a ritual to provide social as well as legal acceptance to the child in the womb Marriage is an indication of the death of the parents in the form of coming generations as it assures the eternal truth that older one has to end to provide the life and opportunities to the incoming generations For men marriage is in fact performing the moral ritualistic and materialistic duties while for women this is mere the accomplishing of sanctifying rites and following the codes of conduct Marriage is not an agreement done on behalf of a legal contract instead it is a complete dedication free from compulsions Wherever forementioned feelings do not exist in the background of the objectives of marriage there marriage means mere accomplishment of sexual satisfaction and false ego and in this situation marriage is just like a contract which if done by a man with one lady or four ladies is mere sexual debauchment in the point of view of the morals and ethics The Lady's Magazine; Or, Entertaining Companion for the Fair Sex, Appropriated Solely to Their Use
