

WHAT'S INSIDE A CELL?

Cells are the smallest working parts of a living thing. Plants and animals - including humans - are made up of billions or trillions of cells. But many living things are made up of just one cell.

Each living cell is like a room with a wall. The wall (called a membrane) is very important. It controls what comes in and out of the cell. It lets the cell gather different chemicals together in one place and keep conditions on the inside of the cell very different from conditions outside. These two facts mean that:

- a cell can break down chemicals to release energy
- a cell can make new chemicals called proteins

Human cells can make at least 80,000 different proteins (not all at once). These proteins carry out all the different jobs in your body.

Proteins in the nucleus store genetic information

Cell zones

A cell is very crowded! But it's also very organised. Cells are divided up into many different zones, with different 'machines' for gathering, arranging, breaking down, building, organising and transporting chemicals. If you look closely into one of your cells, here are some of the main zones you could see:

The membrane keeps the cell's contents together. It lets things the cell needs without letting the cell lose its contents.

Most of these things cells need energy - lots of it! Mitochondria in the power stations of your cells, burning fuel like sugar to release energy.

These ribbed membranes help transport things through the cell.

Liver cell
Scientific name: hepatocyte
Location: liver

Size of mitochondrion

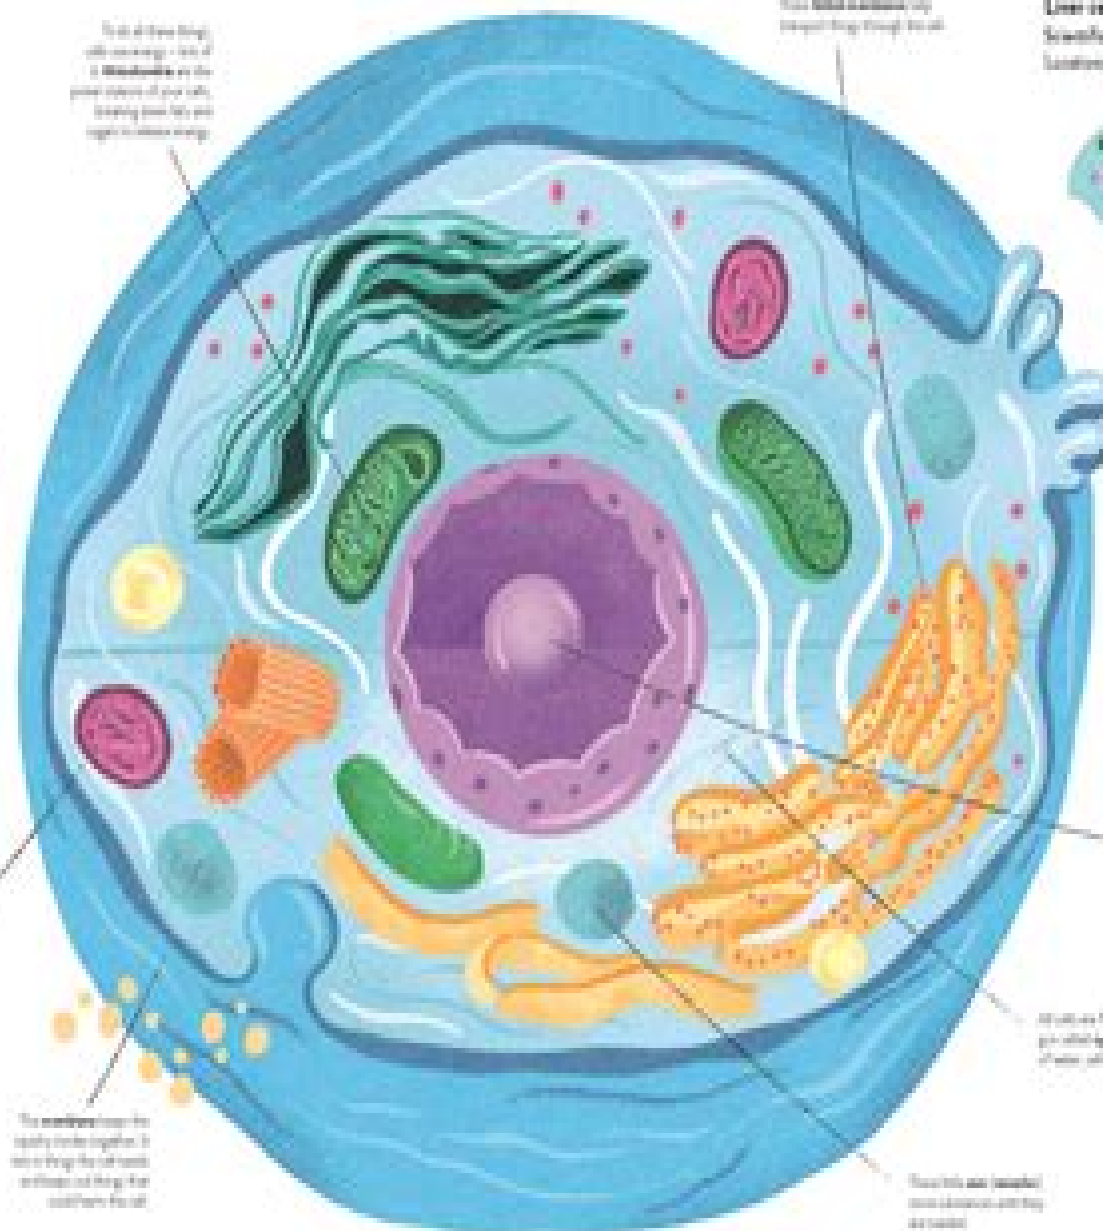

One mitochondrion is a thousandth of a millimetre.

A single human hair is around 100 micrometres wide!

Proteins in the cell's control centre, the nucleus, are the instructions for all the cell. The nucleus has a double membrane to protect them.

All cells are filled with a fluid gel called cytoplasm, made of water, salts and proteins.

These ribles are (roughly) made of proteins and they are made!
