Legends Of Florence:

Legends of Florence: Collected from the People Charles Godfrey Leland, 2020-09-28 This book consists almost entirely of legends or traditions of a varied character referring to places and buildings in Florence such as the Cathedral and Campanile the Signoria the Bargello the different city gates ancient towers and bridges palaces crosses and fountains noted corners odd by ways and many churches To all of these there are tales or at least anecdotes attached which will be found as entertaining to the general reader as they will be interesting not to say valuable to the folklorist and the student of social history but here I must leave the work to speak for itself I originally intended that this should be entirely a collection of relics of ancient mythology with superstitions and sorceries witchcraft and incantations or what may be called occult folk lore of which my work on Etruscan Roman Remains in Popular Tradition consists and of which I have enough additional material to make a large volume But having resolved to add to it local legends and give them the preference I found that the latter so abounded and were so easily collected by an expert that I was obliged to cast out my occult folk lore piece by piece if I ever hoped to get into the port of publication according to terms with the underwriters following the principle laid down by the illustrious Poggio that in a storm the heaviest things must go overboard first he illustrating the idea with the story of the Florentine who having heard this from the captain when at sea in a tempest at once threw his wife into the raging billows perche non haveva cosa pi grave di lei because there was nought on earth which weighed on him so heavily There are several very excellent and pleasant works on Old Florence such as that portion devoted to it in the Cities of Central Italy by A J C Hare the Walks about Florence by the Sisters Horner Florentine Life by Scaife and the more recent and admirable book by Leader Scott which are all I say it advisedly indispensable for those who would really know something about a place which is unusually opulent in ancient adventurous or artistic associations My book is however entirely different from these and all which are exclusively taken from authentic records and books My tales are with a few exceptions derived directly or indirectly from the people themselves having been recorded in the local dialect the exceptions being a few anecdotes racy of the soil taken from antique jest books and such bygone halfpenny literature as belonged to the multitude and had its origin among them These I could not indeed well omit as they every one refer to some peculiar place in Florence To these I must add several which remained obscurely in my memory but which I did not record at the time of hearing or reading not having then the intention of publishing such a book Legends of Florence Charles Godfrey Leland, 1907
