

Chapter 1 – introduction to drugs

Pharmacology: the study of the biological effects of chemicals

Drugs: chemicals that are introduced into the body to cause some sort of change

- When drugs are administered, the body begins a sequence of processes designed to handle the chemicals
- Processes which involve breaking down and eliminating drugs

Pharmacotherapeutics: clinical pharmacology that uses drugs to treat, prevent, and diagnose diseases

- Focuses on the drug's effects on the body and the body's response to the drug

Adverse effects: side effects of the drug

1- Primary actions: undesired effects that may be unpleasant or even dangerous

- After an overdose a pt might not be able to tolerate the normal recommended dose that was given prior, and a lower therapeutic dose may have to be given instead

2- Secondary actions: undesired effects produced in addition to the pharmacological effects

- Sometimes the drug dose can be adjusted for only the desired effects

3- Hypersensitivity reactions: excessive response to primary or secondary effects of drugs

Nursing responsibilities and drug therapy

- Administering drugs
- Assessing drug effects
- Intervening to make the drug regimen more tolerable
- Providing pt teaching about drugs and drug regimens
- Monitoring the overall patient care plan to prevent medication errors

Sources of drugs

1- Plants

- Drugs can also be processed using a synthetic version of the active chemical

2- Animal products

- To become a drug, the chemical must have therapeutic effects without severe toxicity or damaging properties
- Replace human chemicals that fail to be produced because of disease or genetic problems

Core drug knowledge vs core pt variable

Core drug knowledge: the actual drug and the effects, therapeutic effects (what it does)

Core pt variable: things that you have to assess on your pt (allergies, BP, PMH)

Laws and FDA approvals for drugs

Durham Humphrey Amendment (1951): drugs that you are allowed to access without a prescription, and drugs that you must have a prescription for

Control substance act (1970): substances that have the ability to be addictive and abused

- Storage in a double locked system (cabinet within cabinet with a key)

Categories:

Schedule 1: high abuse potential and no acceptable medical use (LSD, marijuana)

Schedule 2: high abuse potential with severe dependence ability (narcotics, amphetamines)
