

of the Illinois Department of Corrections. Without Felton, he told me that for eight years his conduct has been good—except the one time he eventually wanted to do after he's released. I study to take my GED [high school equivalency] statistics show that prisoners who have been honored and I told that to the prison official. The woman in charge of counseling prisoners and asked, "Why can't he study for a GED?" The warden responded, to my amazement, "We encourage prisoners to study for a GED." "I will save lives and money for Illinois," I said. "On my visit, I've talked to an aide to our president Barack Obama, the chair of the state bar association, about this. I believe we should do it because one prisoner and one woman told me. It would have been easy for both of them. "Why waste my time on a letter?" Instead they acted, and Illinois prisoners wrote as a result.

The experienced observer notes, "Getting things done is the mistake that is a committed public stand, or a belief in a larger-than-life figure—someone with courage, vision, or knowledge that we possess."<sup>26</sup> It's the little thing with difference.

Deborah Maurer is another example of one of the little things that may result in something down the road. She bought a copy of a book I wrote, Freedom's Champion: Elijah Lovejoy. It's the story of a leader of the anti-slavery movement before the Civil War who was killed by a mob for his strong stand. It's the most exciting book I've written. However, few people have ever heard of Elijah Lovejoy. As a result, also have been modest. The last time I saw U. N. ambassador and former Illinois governor Adlai Stevenson before his death, he said, "Someone should make a movie out of that story." I agreed, but I don't know anything about the film business, so I did nothing to pursue the idea.

Deborah Maurer also doesn't know anything about the film business. She lives in Freeburg, Illinois, a small suburban/rural community of about four thousand citizens, and works for American Water Works in Alton, Illinois. After reading my Lovejoy book she came to the same conclusion as Adlai Stevenson. She talked to her father in Los Angeles, and repeated—with conviction—the idea about making a movie. Her father, John Townsend, isn't in the movie business either, but one day, while eating in a small restaurant in Los Angeles, he noticed another patron busily working on a document. "He's nosey," Deborah says with a laugh, describing her father. Townsend asked the gentleman what he did. It turned out the hard-working person was screenwriter Ken O'Donnell. Townsend told him about his daughter's movie idea. O'Donnell gave Townsend his business card and told him to have his daughter contact him, never expecting much to happen out of it. Deborah bought another copy of the book and sent it to O'Donnell. The screenwriter's version is that Townsend "bugged me for five minutes and I agreed to look at the book." Now O'Donnell is working on a script for a movie, he signed a contract with my publisher for movie rights, and maybe—still a maybe—a movie will be produced that can influence people in our nation and other nations about race relations and free speech. If it happens, credit will go to Deborah Maurer
