

LABORATORY I

INTRODUCTION TO MICROSCOPY

PART A (Week 1)

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

When you have completed this lab, you will be expected to:

1. List the major branches of microscopy and briefly describe their advantages and disadvantages.
2. Identify the various components of a compound light microscope, describe what they do mechanically, and describe their function in microscopy.
3. Prepare a slide of a specimen.
4. Use a compound light microscope to magnify a specimen and bring the image into fine focus using all objective lenses.
5. Define field of view, magnification, resolution, working distance, field diameter, and depth of field.
6. Describe the relationship between magnification and working distance, magnification and field diameter, and magnification and depth of field.
7. Estimate the size of objects viewed through the microscope.

Important: You must read this document and complete the PRE-LAB EXERCISES on page 13 and 14 BEFORE coming to the lab. One completed lab report (pages 13-17) per team of lab partners must be submitted at the end of the lab period.

INTRODUCTION

The microscope is a fundamental tool in biological research. It is used to view a magnified image of a specimen. All microscopes rely on one or more lenses to magnify images. Three important considerations in microscopy are the degree of magnification, degree of resolution, and whether the microscope can produce a 3-dimensional image or simply a 2-dimensional image.

Magnification: Magnification is the ratio of an object's image to its real size. Expressed a factor such as 40 times (40X).

Resolution: Resolution is the ability to see fine details of structure. Limit of resolution refers to how far apart adjacent objects must be in order to be distinguished as separate entities. Expressed as a distance such as 500 nm.

There are various types of microscopy. Two main branches of microscopy are light microscopy, which uses visible light to produce a magnified image, and electron microscopy, which uses a beam of electrons. One major advantage of light microscopy is that it can be used to view live specimens. In the case of electron microscopy, the live specimen is killed during the procedure. However, electron microscopes have much higher magnification and resolution powers. The most powerful electron microscopes so
