Figures In A Bygone Landscape:

Workers' Worlds Andrew Davies, 1992 Manchester and Salford have a special place in the history of the British working class. They lay at the heart of the cotton industry, the spark of the industrial revolution and as a consequence were among the first places to experience the application of steam power and the factory system to production. As a result, the Manchester Salford conurbation was the first to see a fully formed industrial working class. Whilst industrialization went through its heroic phase, the two cities seemed to be blazing a trail not only for the rest of the country but for the world. During the first half of the 19th century, social observers came from across Europe to see what they supposed to be their future. Manchester was in Asa Briggs's influential phrase, the shock city of the age. The city demonstrated the ability of science to control nature; this was why in 1843 Benjamin Disraeli described Manchester as the modern Athens. However, as Alexis de Tocqueville had noted eight years earlier, there was another side to increasing productivity. Figures in a Bygone Landscape Don Haworth, 1986

Lancashire Cotton Operatives and Work, 1900-1950 Alan Fowler, 2018-10-24 This title was first published in 2003. The cotton industry was one of the major motors that powered Britain's industrial development from the mid-eighteenth century, contributing in no small way to the revolution that was to transform Europe over the next hundred years. The combination of technological developments, colonial exploits and social transformation that all came together in the Lancashire cotton industry provided a perfect example of how the new world would function, its priorities and its ambitions. Into this fast-moving and fluid situation were thrust the men, women and children who formed the vast pool of labour necessary to keep the spindles and looms running. It is their experiences, above all, that illuminate the history of the cotton industry and how it came to change the face of Britain through the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. In this study, Alan Fowler takes an in-depth look at the Lancashire cotton industry through the prism of its workers, their families and organisations. He argues that by 1850 the triumph of the factory system was complete and the factory operative a mainstay of a transformed society based on a new economic order. With this increasingly important role in the new economy came opportunities which cotton workers were not slow to grasp. Crucial to the history of the Lancashire cotton operatives were the collective organisations they established, which forced employers and government to treat with them. By the beginning of the twentieth century, these organisations had managed to raise wages, improve working conditions, reduce working hours, establish the right to holidays and force the introduction of factory legislation. This book explores how these victories were won and the impact they had on the industry and wider society.
