Learning To Eat:

First Bite Bee Wilson, 2015-12-01 Food historian Bee Wilson delves deep into the latest research from food psychologists neuroscientists and nutritionists to reveal that our food habits are shaped by family and culture memory and gender hunger and love We do not come into the world with an innate sense of taste or nutrition as omnivores we have to learn how and what to eat how sweet is too sweet and what food will give us the most energy for the coming day Drawing on the psychology of eating she shows that it is possible despite our dysfunctional food industry and habits to feed ourselves better Eating to Learn Better - Learning to Eat Better Through the National School Lunch Program University of the State of New York.
