

Scientific Method

- A logical approach to the solution of scientific problem.
- A systematical way of solving a scientific problem that is needed to be proven.
- Generally have five (5) steps: Problem, Observation, Hypothesis, Experiment, and Data and Conclusion

Hypothesis:

- A tentative explanation or idea about how things work.
- A hypothesis guides you in further work to get a better answer.

Example: "The moon is made of cheese" (note: this is the kind of hypothesis my wife would come up with). How could we test this hypothesis?

- Construct a rocket to go to the moon and return with samples
- Make a cheese pizza substituting the moon samples for the cheese
- Ask people (e.g. graduate students. No, wait, they aren't real people...) to eat the pizza and see if they can tell any difference from pizza made with real cheese™ (from Wisconsin)
- Most likely conclusion: Hey, this pizza tastes like dirt

New hypothesis (altered to include additional information from above experiment): The moon is not made of cheese, but is made of dirt, sort of like the Earth

Theory:

- A theory is an explanation of the general principles of certain phenomena with considerable facts to support it.
- A theory remains valid only if every new piece of information supports it.
- If a single piece of available information does not support a theory, then the theory (as proposed) is disproved.

Fact:

- An indisputable truth.

Law:

- A summary of a whole array of observations on a particular subject.
- It describes a natural phenomenon without attempting to explain it.
- Can often be expressed by simple mathematical expressions or relationships.

Other Examples:

- It is a fact that on June 30, 1908 in Tunguska, Siberia, an explosion equivalent to about 15 million tons of TNT occurred.
- It is a theory that this explosion was due to a natural, extra-terrestrial phenomenon and not to an activity associated with man.
- One hypothesis is that a comet collided with the Earth (a competing hypothesis is that a small black hole collided with the Earth)
