Excerpt from A Course of Lectures on Oratory and Criticism: It may be thought by some that these lectures are much too short and too concisely written for the purpose of public instruction, but they should be apprized that it was my custom to write down only the outlines of what I delivered in the classes, that for the benefit of my pupils I used to attend them provided with more copious illustrations and a greater variety of examples, and besides always spent a considerable part of the time appropriated to every lecture in examining them on the subject of the preceding lecture, hearing their remarks or objections, and explaining more distinctly what they appeared not to have clearly understood.
