The Neuropsychology of Everyday Life: Assessment and Basic Competencies David E. Tupper, Keith D. Cicerone, 2012-12-06 For a period of some fifteen years following completion of my internship training in clinical psychology 1950 1951 at the Washington University School of Medicine and my concurrent successful navigation through that school s neuroanatomy course clinical work in neuropsychology for me and the psychologists of my generation consisted almost exclusively of trying to help our physician colleagues differentiate patients with neurologic from those with psychiatric disorders In time experience led all of us from the several disciplines involved in this enterprise to the conclusion that the crude diagnostic techniques available to us circa 1945 1965 had garnered us little valid information upon which to base such complex differential diagnostic decisions It now is gratifying to look back and review the remarkable progress that has occurred in the field of clinical neuropsychology in the four decades since I was a graduate student In the late 1940s such pioneers as Ward Halstead Alexander Luria George Yacorzynski Hans Lukas Teuber and Arthur Benton already were involved in clinical studies that by the late 1960s would markedly have improved the quality of clinical practice However the only psychological tests that the clinical psychologist of my immediate post Second World War generation had as aids for the diagnosis of neurologically based conditions involving cognitive deficit were such old standbys as the Wechsler Bellevue Rorschach Draw A Person Bender Gestalt and Graham Kendall Memory for Designs Test

The Morphosyntax of Transitions

Víctor Acedo-Matellán,2016-02-18 This book examines the cross linguistic expression of changes of location or state taking as a starting point Talmy's typological generalization that classifies languages as either satellite framed or verb framed. In verb framed languages such as those of the Romance family the result state or location is encoded in the verb. In satellite framed languages such as English or Latin the result state or location is encoded in a non verbal element. These languages can be further subdivided into weak satellite framed languages in which the element expressing result must form a word with the verb and strong satellite framed languages in which it is expressed by an independent element: an adjective, a prepositional phrase or a particle. In this volume Victor Acedo Matellán explores the similarities between Latin and Slavic in their expression of events of transition: neither allows the expression of complex adjectival resultative constructions and both express the result state or location of a complex transition through prefixes. They are therefore analysed as weak satellite framed languages along with Ancient Greek and some varieties of Mandarin Chinese and stand in contrast to strong satellite framed languages such as English, the Germanic languages in general and Finno-Ugric. This variation is expressed in terms of the morphological properties of the head that expresses transition which is argued to be affixal in weak but not in strong satellite framed languages. The author takes a neo constructionist approach to argument structure which accounts for the verbal elasticity shown by Latin and a Distributed Morphology approach to the syntax morphology interface.
