Legacy Of Change:

A Legacy of Change Conrad Joseph Bahre, 2016-12-01 The arrival of Anglo settlers in the 1870s marked the beginning of major vegetation changes in southeastern Arizona including an increase in woody plants in rangelands the degradation of riparian wetlands and the spread of non native plants While many of these changes have already been linked to human land use through comparative photographs and historic descriptions it has long been presumed that changes in the region s climate have also contributed to vegetation change Geographer Conrad Bahre now challenges the view that these vegetation changes are due to climatic change Correlating his own field research with archival records and photographs Bahre demonstrates that most of the changes follow some type of human disturbance such as cattle grazing fuelwood cutting wildfire suppression agriculture and road construction Indeed all available evidence suggests that Anglo settlement brought unprecedented changes to the land Vegetation change in the American West has long been an issue of concern This careful scrutiny of one corner of that region one of the most ecologically diverse areas of the United States shows how poorly understood is the relationship between human activities and vegetation More important it introduces new techniques for differentiating between natural and anthropogenic factors effecting vegetation change that can be used to help ecologists understand vegetation dynamics worldwide

The Renaissance of Legacy Systems Ian Warren, 2012-12-06 Today software professionals recognize that change in software systems is inevitable There are many systems currently in operation however which were developed before the need for change was understood Such systems are commonly referred to as legacy systems and were developed with relatively short lifetimes in mind Software engineering is a relatively young discipline which is continually improving to provide better support for the development of software systems What were once state of the art techniques tools and processes are now dated and have resulted in systems which are not responsive to change For historical reasons dated development practice traded maintainability for other system attributes such as cost and performance A significant number of legacy systems remain in operation because they are critical to the business processes which they support The combination of extended lifetimes and poor maintainability means that legacy systems are expensive to change and in many cases they cannot accommodate emerging requirements This is clearly an undesirable situation which until recently has been tackled by replacing the system or attempting to maintain it Replacing a legacy system is dangerous since you face the risk of losing vital business knowledge which is embedded in many old systems In many cases system replacement is not cost effective Conversely if you attempt to maintain a legacy system there is often little return on the investment in maintenance effort and the system remains difficult and expensive to change
