

MERCAT CLASSICS

This volume brings together two classic accounts of crofting life—Croft and Ceilidh and Highland Memories—which have long been out of print. They are amongst the most authentic evocations of Highland life we possess.

Their author, Colin MacDonald, had the story-teller's gift as well as the ability to record his tales in a distinctive style which made apt use of the Gaelic idiom. They came straight from experience—MacDonald was himself a Cromartie estate crofter, a knowledgeable and erudite man who became a senior Land Officer with the Department of Agriculture for Scotland and later, Gaelic speaking member of the Land Court. His forbears lived on the same croft in Ross-shire where he was born. He was brought up in the real 'Ceilidh' atmosphere described in the first of these books, his parents' house being the Ceilidh house of the Glen. He never lost touch with his croft (where he died in 1957) and his tales of crofting life have been cherished since their first publication over fifty years ago.

Colin MacDonald's daughter, Dr Margaret Newton, still lives on the ancestral croft near Strathpeffer. In her Introduction she writes: 'My brothers and I always admired father's books with their fund of information, humour and tales of the past, so many of which we had heard told and retold in our childhood.' Now they can be enjoyed again by a new generation of readers.
