Parents as Educators Keith J. Topping, 2025-08-05 Modern practice in the 1980s was to involve parents increasingly in the education of their children and was supported by legislation Particularly when children had special needs parents required structured training and support to ensure they affectively sustained their vital role as educators at home Many large scale programmes to provide this had been developed throughout the world at the time for example Home Start Portage Home Visiting Projects and Paired Reading Projects However not all of these had been thoroughly evaluated and the existing literature was scattered and difficult to access Some projects demonstrated spectacular results and high cost effectiveness while others proved more disappointing Originally published in 1986 this book critically analyses over 600 international English language research reports on the effectiveness of parent training programmes In addition a detailed guide to the practicalities of planning projects is provided together with a comprehensive directory of useful resource materials After an introductory overview the evidence on the effects on child progress of parental involvement in school activities is reviewed as is research on the impact of schemes of regular structured communication between home and school Programmes designed to train parents to accelerate the development of their children at home are considered in the subsequent chapters starting with ordinary children Much of the book reviews projects targeted on children with some sort of special educational need from children whose special needs stem from a widespread difficulty such as poverty or second language learning systematically through to children whose needs stem from rarer and more severe issues Each chapter has its own summary for ease of reader use while an overall summary chapter points out best buys and directions for future developments This volume will be of major interest to teachers psychologists social workers community health personnel community educationalists researchers many others working with parents and children and to some parents themselves This book is a re issue originally published in 1986 The language used is a reflection of its era and no offence is meant by the Publishers to any reader by this re publication DHHS Publication No. (OHDS). ,1983 Found-long Term Gains Bernard Brown,2019-03-08 Since the founding of Project Head Start in 1965 there has been intense public as well as academic debate about the effectiveness of early intervention programs in producing lasting gains in children s intellectual development In the past few years new evidence has accumulated at a rapid pace and there are now over 100 major studies of longitudinal experiments and Head Start program evaluations A series of longitudinal studies of early intervention experiments was begun in the 1960s The children who participated in these programs are now past the third grade and old enough to give reliable responses to IQ and achievement tests In addition they have now been in school long enough to allow examination of their overall school performance This volume includes reports which review both center and house based early intervention programs One of the papers presents preliminary findings from the Developmental Continuity Consortium which is pooling the data from 12 major longitudinal experiments The authors cite evidence for late developing gains which seem permanent These sleeper effects were not manifest in the scores of the same groups of children in the first few years of the postintervention period In addition to IQ and achievement gains there is also evidence for gains in emotional adjustment Early intervention appears to have dramatic effects in the assignment of children to special education classes and on retention in grade somehow enabling them to maintain their position in the classroom In all the papers describe 96 major studies which report positive impacts from early intervention programs Research in Education ,1974 On the Road to Reading Derry Gosselin Koralek,1997 Guided Reading Basics Lori Jamison Rog,2003 Classroom tested strategies and model guided reading lessons for emergent early developmental and fluent readers Departments of Labor and Health, Education, and Welfare and Related Agencies Appropriations for Fiscal Year 1978 United States.
