Global Currents Tasha G. Oren, Patrice Petro, 2004 Rhetoric about media technology tends to fall into two extreme categories unequivocal celebration or blanket condemnation This is particularly true in debate over the clash of values when first world media infiltrate third world audiences Bringing together the best new work on contemporary media practices technologies and policies the essayists in Global Currents argue that neither of these extreme views accurately represents the role of media technology today New ways of thinking about film television music and the internet demonstrate that it is not only media technologies that affect the cultures into which they are introduced it is just as likely that the receiving culture will change the media Topics covered in the volume include copyright law and surveillance technology cyber activism in the African Diaspora transnational monopolies and local television industries the marketing and consumption of global music click politics and the war on Afghanistan the techno politics of distance education artificial intelligence and global legal institutions and traveling and squatting in digital space Balanced between major theoretical positions and original field research the selections address the political and cultural meanings that surround and configure new technologies

Technology, Television, and Competition Jeffrey A. Hart, 2004-02-05 In the late 1980s and 1990s the advanced industrial countries considered replacing the existing analogue television infrastructure with a new digital one A key common feature to the debates over digital TV DTV in the United States Western Europe and Japan was the eventual victory of the ideas of digitalism the superiority of everything digital over everything analogue and of digital convergence the merging of computing telecommunications and broadcasting infrastructures made possible by digitalization in public debates over standards Jeffrey Hart's book shows how nationalism and regionalism combined with digitalism to produce three different and incompatible DTV standards in the three regions an outcome which has led to missed opportunities in developing the new technologies Hart's book contributes to our understanding of relations between business and government and of competition between the world's great economic powers

New Television, Old Politics Hernan Galperin, 2004-05-24 This book examines the economic political and technological forces that are shaping the future of broadcasting in advanced industrialized nations by comparing the transition from analog to digital TV in the US and Britain Digital TV involves a major reordering of the broadcast sector that requires governments to rethink governance tools for the digital media era By looking at how the transition is unfolding in these nations the book uncovers the political underpinnings of the emerging governance regime for digital communications and explores the implications of the transition for the development of the Information Society in the US and Europe The findings challenge much conventional wisdom about media deregulation and the globalization of communications The transition to digital TV has not weakened but rather reinforced government control over broadcasting Moreover contrary to what many globalization theories would predict it has reinforced preexisting differences in the organization of media across nations Communication Technology Update ,1993

Inoguchi,2001-04-17 This book examines global change from a dialectical perspective Looking at global change in terms of unipolarisation in international security globalisation in the world economy and democratisation in global governance the volume provides a refreshingly Japanese angle on addressing complex interplays between the social forces underlying these themes The book is indispensable reading for undergraduate and graduate students or IR theory international security international political economy and global governance as well as American and Japanese foreign policy The Journal of International Communication ,1998
