called home It was a small cottage with something less than an acre of land attached enough upon which to raise a few vegetables It belonged to his mother nominally but was mortgaged for half its value to Squire Leech the father of James The amount of the mortgage precisely was seven hundred and fifty dollars It had cost his father fifteen hundred When he built it obtaining half this sum on mortgage he hoped to pay it up by degrees but it turned out that from sickness and other causes this proved impossible When five months before he had died suddenly the house which was all he left was subject to this incumbrance Upon this interest was payable semi annually at the rate of six per cent Forty five dollars a year is not a large sum but it seemed very large to Mrs Carter when added to their necessary expenses for food clothing and fuel How it was to be paid she did not exactly see The same problem had perplexed Herbert who like a good son as he was shared his mother s cares and tried to lighten them But in a small village like Wrayburn there are not many ways of getting money at any rate for a boy There were no manufactories as in some large villages and money was a scarce commodity Herbert Carter's

Legacy Horatio Alger, Jr,2020-04-30 James looked after him with a scowl He was sharp enough to see that Herbert in spite of his patched pants was a better scholar and a greater favorite than himself He had intended to humiliate him on the present occasion but he was forced to acknowledge that he had come off second best from the encounter He walked moodily away and took what comfort he could in the thought that he was far superior to a boy who owned but two pairs of pants and one of them patched He was foolish enough to feel that a boy or man derived importance from the extent of his wardrobe and exulted in the personal possession of eight pairs of pants This scene occurred at recess After school was over Herbert walked home He was a little thoughtful There was no disgrace in a patch as he was sensible enough to be aware Still he would have a little preferred not to wear one That was only natural In that point I suppose my readers will fully agree with him But he knew very well that his mother who had been left a widow had hard work enough to get along as it was and he had no idea of troubling her on the subject Besides he had a better suit for Sundays neat though plain and he felt that he ought not to be disturbed by James Leech s insolence Herbert Carter's Legacy; Or, the Inventor's Son Horatio Jr. Alger,2018 Herbert
