Abstract

The article explores how change in lifestyles has impacted the family relations leading to divorce worldwide more in industrial countries, and to a smaller extent in developing countries. Sociologically speaking, the main cause of such increase in divorce event is social change emerging due to modernization and industrialization, more education for them, change in women's consumption behavior etc. All such trends are affecting the family adjustability and the mutual respect and tolerance, leading to challenges and conflicts toward divorces. Divorce, though not being a huge problem in the Western world, it is problem-creating in the developing countries. Being a stigma in many such countries, the divorced women face lots of social and economic issues. Many of such women cannot easily remarry, and eventually deviate from the right and regular way of life. The children of divorce also lose a lot of advantages such as socialization, family/parents' affections etc. The method of research used in the present article is of qualitative type. In conclusion, it is proved that in societies with minimum divorce, more family and social health could be maintained.

I. Introduction

Divorce being a painful event for families and societies, is increasingly taking place in almost all societies. It is the beginning of new relationships; both parties (men and women) will encounter new life, new values, and new lifestyles. Though some challenges fade away, new challenges emerge. In post-divorce era, children highly face problems materially, emotionally, and from the viewpoints of caring, socialization etc. Among the industrial countries, USA has the highest frequency of divorce; one of every two marriages leads to divorce. Then it is the European countries having an average of 40% of marriages breaking down into divorce. Due to increasing socio-cultural change that is constantly appearing, many countries where divorce was a taboo before, it is currently highly taking place. Many non-industrial countries in which women have got more rights, benefits, education and independence in recent decades, divorce takes place in an unprecedented number, and that becomes a new value, being followed by younger generations. Countries like India and Iran in which low number of divorces used to take place before, currently high number of divorces are registered every year.

Children's adjustment to divorce in family is quite hard to believe. They are the only members of the family who lose a lot. Parents may remarry and continue life, but children lose the process of socialization, emotional attachments, face loneliness, living with one parent, in a stepfather/mother or none (in a nursing home). Such children will eventually repeat the cycle in their twenties or so. Many of such children become child laborers in nonindustrial countries. They are usually called "Parasites" by other members
