

We cannot seek achievement for ourselves and forget about progress and prosperity for our community... Our ambitions must be broad enough to include the aspirations and needs of others, for their sakes and for our own.
Cesar Chavez

Latinos are the fastest-growing ethnic category in the United States; therefore, the future health of U.S. engineering will depend upon the success with which our nation recruits Latinos to the field. U.S. engineering schools produced 1,290 Latino engineers at the bachelor's level in 1977. Only seven mainland institutions produced 25 or more Latino engineers in 1977 with the University of Texas at El Paso leading with 60 bachelor's degrees. Women were nearly invisible among Latino BSE recipients. Since then, Latino representation among new graduates has increased. In 2009, 20 percent of the 5,577 bachelor's degrees earned by U.S. Latinos were awarded by Puerto Rican institutions.

Hispanic Serving Institutions (HSIs) are important in the production of Latino college graduates. But according to a report by ¡Excelencia in Education!: "Latino college students' choices create HSIs. However, most Latino students enrolled at HSIs did not know their institution was an HSI." This means the institutions that "count" as HSIs change yearly, depending on the percentage of Latino students among enrolled students. There are important differences within the Latino category associated with country of origin; unfortunately, engineering educational data on the important Latino subgroups are not available.

Puerto Rican universities have long been an important producer of Latino engineers, with two schools awarding 392 degrees in 1977, with 5.6 percent earned by women. By 2009, five Puerto Rican institutions conferred 1,160 engineering bachelor's degrees to Latinos, representing 21 percent of the nation's 5,577 engineering bachelor's degrees. For quite some time, too, women have earned a substantial proportion of engineering degrees on the island: by 2009 women earned 40 percent of engineering bachelor's degrees awarded by the flagship public institution—the University of Puerto Rico, Mayaguez.

It takes fifteen to twenty-five years for people to rise to top leadership positions in industry... So if industry is getting one percent minority engineers in 1972, that means that in 1990, that's about the proportion that will emerge from the competition to the top leadership positions in industry... (J. Stanford Smith, Vice President, General Electric, Engineering Education Conference, June 25, 1972)

- Latinos earned just over 8 percent of engineering bachelor's degrees in 2009
- Latinos earned 1,317 master's degrees and only 153 doctoral degrees in engineering in 2009
- The percent of engineering bachelor's degrees earned by Latinos has continued to increase while those earned by African Americans reveal a recent decline
- Latino women's share of engineering degrees has not increased at the bachelor's and masters' levels since 2002
- Latinos' inroads into doctoral degrees has been modest since the 1970s

"HSIs are generally less expensive than other institutions, are located in large Latino communities, and tend to be more accessible compared to other institutions." (Santiago, D. A. 2007. "Choosing Hispanic Serving Institutions: A Closer Look at Latino Students' College Choices," ¡Excelencia in Education!).
