Herpes Simplex Virus Barry T. Rouse, 2012-12-06 Although upstaged by the tragic appearance of the human immunodeficiency virus herpes simplex viruses HSV types 1 and 2 continue to be major human pathogens against which we lack acceptable vaccines or other means of immunological control The virus is large and complex coding for 70 or more proteins Although many mysteries remain to be unraveled our knowledge base regarding genomic organization gene expression and regulation pathogenesis and immune recognition of component parts is quite considerable Indeed meetings devoted entirely to herpesviruses are conspicuous by their frequency and excellent yet sometimes exclusive attendance The purpose of this volume is to compile in a single book a series of reviews by leading investigators that deal with various aspects of virus host interactions and which hopefully will provide clues as to how to best manage HSV from an immunobiological perspective Ultimately one anticipates that a full understanding of virus host interaction will lead to strategies useful for the prevention and control of HSV The state of current progress with conventional vaccines is presented as is a chapter on intracellular immunization This latter novel approach to virus infections comes at approximately the bicentenary of Jenner's introduction of a successful conventional immunization strategy

Pathogenicity of Human Herpesviruses due to Specific Pathogenicity Genes Yechiel Becker, Gholamreza Darai, 2012-12-06 Six members of the Herpesviridae family are human pathogens including herpes and 2 HSV I and 2 Epstein Barr virus EBV varicella zoster simplex virus I virus VZV human cytomegalovirus HCMV and human herpesvirus 6 HHV 6 Each of these viruses is capable of causing distinct diseases of varying severity in children young adults and the aged The diseases range from infection of epithelial tissue to the infection of internal organs and white blood cells A common feature of the six pathogenic human herpesviruses is their ability to latently infect different cell types in which the viral DNA is not integrated and is unable to express its pathogenicity Reactivation of the herpesviruses is a result of cellular processes which reactivate viral genes leading to virus progeny and to signs of infection Due to their ability to become latent after initial infection once the pathogenic herpesviruses infect children they are maintained throughout life having the potential of cause various diseases upon reactivation

Contemporary Topics in Immunobiology Michael Hanna, 2012-12-06 It has long been suspected and recently confirmed that there is an etiologic relationship between several viruses and naturally occurring neoplasias Virus precursors in the form of nucleic acids or antigens have consistently been associated with certain neoplasias However the role of these virus specified precursors in etiology remains obscure Recent studies of virus associated neoplasias have led to advances in molecular techniques which have yielded increasingly sensitive assays for detection of virus specific nucleic acids and which have enabled the disruption of virus particles without concomitant loss in antigenicity of the components These procedures have in turn resulted in molecular probes that allow more definitive evaluation of the host response to its virus and to the tumor cell with which the virus or its precursors are associated Evaluations of the immune response and status of the host have provided important information about carcinogenesis and the tools for seroepidemiological studies of a variety of cancers These seroepidemiological studies have demonstrated that several human cancers e g Burkitt's lymphoma and nasopharyngeal carcinoma are probably virus induced and that antibodies that are diagnostic and prognostic for these diseases are detectable The conclusion that feline leukemia is a disease transmitted horizontally by a virus resulted primarily from immunological experiments Cancer Immunology, Immunotherapy, 1993 Current Topics in Microbiology and Immunology Barry T.
