Part1: Biography and Autobiography differences: The focus of the biography is different from the autobiography. For example, the biography described the major things that he accomplished. But in the autobiography, there were more personal subjects in the interview. Another way they are different is because of how they provide details. In the biography, they only include very big details. And in the autobiography, he talks about all the details of his life. They are personal details, small details, and big details. The language they use in the biography and the autobiography is different. For example, in the autobiography, he sometimes uses figurative language when he speaks in the interview. The tone is different between the two because in the biography it is just factual. In the autobiography he feels serious and happy. In the biography, the central idea is his life story. But, in the interview he is just explaining what he went through.

Part1: Biography and Autobiography similarities: The focus between the two is similar because the interview and the biography both talk about Ben Carson's life. The details are somewhat similar because they both talk about Ben Carson's life. The details are literal and factual. The languages they each use is literal and technical. The tone that both the interview and the biography use is serious because they both are listing facts about Ben Carson. I think the message that they are both trying to send is never to give up on your dreams.

Part 2: I would recommend the Encyclopedia Britannica. I would do this because it has only the major details. Also, in the Ben Carson interview, there are a lot of extra details that are not very important. And lastly, the biography contains more information.
