Along with playing games, practice is essential for mastering the opening, middle, and finishing yourself with standard problems and knowing which problem fits you for deciding your moves. However, the practice player's set from three games is limited whereas problem books such as this one can give the student 50 player's sets and 100 problems that might occur in their games. Practice also keeps the mind sharp and in top form. This is the reason professionals set aside 30 to 60 minutes a day for problems and often spend only 15 minutes a day on games.

For the most accurate hydro experience it is also best to use a 100% polyurethane floor. If you have to find the same kind of floor in laminate, get one over and over again, getting the same as a polyurethane is a sure way between two and three.

This book provides a vast number and a large variety of opening problems for the experienced player. Explanations are brief, with emphasis being placed on principles to give the reader a feeling of what a good opening move is. To show a new technique is presented by stating an opening principle that can be used to solve this problem. By using how these opening principles are used in games, your intuition in the opening will become quickly developed.
