M. Bower, 1945 The Flying U Strikes B. M. Bower, 1948 The Flying U Strikes B M Bower, 2020-04-04 A raw March wind such as only the high prairies ever know poured like ice water over the bald benchland that forms a part of the Flying U range It roughened the hair on the two saddle horses it tossed their manes and it whipped their tails around their hocks as they loped down to the bluff edge where the rough country began Chip Bennett younger of the two riders broke a silence of half an hour Those horses will be hugging the brush on a day like this he said and drew a hand across his smarting eyes That s right Weary Davidson agreed No use combing the benches to day Mamma That wind sure does go through a fellow What say we swing over to the left here Chip and kinda bear off more towards the river They re in the breaks that s a cinch We ve had this wind for four days I look for em to be watering along Rabbit Creek where there s lots of shelter That s what I was thinking Chip hunched his shoulders within his sour dough coat We can make it down off that point over there easiest With one accord their rein hands twitched to the left and the horses obeyed that slight pressure against the right side of their necks Instant relief was felt from that biting wind now pushing hard against their backs instead of flat against their right sides The tear lines dried upon their cheeks They let their horses down to a walk pulled off their gloves and sat on them while they rolled and lighted cigarettes Neither spoke again Neither was conscious of their long silences which held a satisfying companionship not to be broken by idle chatter They were content and that was enough The Bower Atmosphere Victoria Lamont, 2024 The Flying U Strikes B.M.
