Focus on Cellular Signalling Research Dorothy T. Leeds,2006 Cell signalling is the communication inside a cell or with its environment It plays an important role in cellular growth survival and apoptosis For instance the growth of a cell requires production of certain proteins The genes that encode these proteins are located in DNA inside the nucleus while the initial signal for cellular growth may come from outside the cell To induce the expression of these genes the external signal must pass through specific pathways to reach these genes in DNA The signalling pathway involves several proteins If any one of them becomes abnormal or non functional the cellular process would be altered which may cause disease Therefore knowing the detailed pathway is very important in understanding the pathogenesis of diseases

Focus on Malignant Pleural Mesothelioma Immunology and Immunotherapy Christophe Blanquart,Didier Jean,Chiara Porta,2023-08-15 Malignant pleural mesothelioma MPM is a rare thoracic cancer that derives from the mesothelial cells of the pleura and is causally associated with exposure to asbestos Because of its aggressiveness and resistance to therapies MPM prognosis is extremely poor and the 5 year survival rate is approximately 10% Despite its poor effectiveness chemotherapy with cisplatin and pemetrexed has long remained the standard of care for upfront treatment with no second line therapy available Recently the approval of ipilimumab anti CTLA 4 plus nivolumab anti PD 1 for the first line treatment of unresectable MPM has marked a significant milestone in particular for the non epithelioid MPM subtype which is more resistant to chemotherapy and associated with a poorer outcome. However, most MPM patients are still resistant to cancer therapies. Beyond histologic subtypes, recent studies have highlighted extensive genetic variation and gene expression deregulation both between and within MPM patients. This molecular heterogeneity highlights the need for a personalized treatment approach. Therefore, both multiple therapeutic options and predictive biomarkers that can guide clinical decision making are urgently needed. Tumor cell immunogenicity and tumor microenvironment composition (TME) are the major determinants of the success of immunotherapy. Despite the low tumor mutational burden, recent studies indicate that chromoanagenesis and chromotripsis are molecular features of MPM. Since chromosomal instability can lead to the expression of neo antigens, it could also influence the efficacy of immune checkpoint inhibitors (ICIs). The immunosuppressive TME is an additional important hurdle that limits the efficacy of immunotherapy. The combination of ICIs with strategies to boost anti tumor immunity by restraining immunosuppressive myeloid cells or by reprogramming cold tumor into hot tumor is an active area of research. This Research Topic aims to discuss recent advances in understanding and targeting MPM immune microenvironment for therapeutic purposes along with potential predictive biomarkers to select patients who most likely will respond to immunotherapies. We are interested in basic and clinical studies that explore the crosstalk between tumor and immune cells in order to highlight new molecular targets, approaches and combination treatments to enhance anti tumor immunity in MPM and assess potential predictive biomarkers of response to immunotherapy.

Terrorism sadly seems here to stay and to stay with a vengeance. It turns out that the United States was not prepared for it and now must play catch up. Countries such as Japan, France, Spain, England and others have been targeted and attacked as well. As opposed to traditional forms of war where the enemy is known and locatable, the war on terrorism features foggily defined enemies who seem at the same time everywhere and nowhere. This book presents important new reports of issues, trends and developments in the global war on terrorism.
