Resilience. Which is the ability to recover quickly from a challenge.

Most types and forms of poetry have an ancient history and the lyric and the narrative are no different.

Aristotle distinguished three generic categories of poetry: lyric, drama and epic.

The epic poem was the voice for the entire tribe, its myths, problems and even history.

The dramatic monologue was a persona voice.

The lyric was a solitary voice speaking or singing on his or her own behalf.

This was the introduction of the "I" in poetry.

Early lyric poetry was always set to music, in the Renaissance, the music was dropped and the words remained. And almost all poetry today is a form of the lyric. And poetry today is usually all about conflict, vague setting, character is usually only the absent speaker in the poem and plot is a hindrance.

The lyric poem is short, hardly ever more than sixty lines, shorter, supposed to be musical, does not tell a story which portrays characters and action, usually in first person and there is always one specific mood or emotion being expressed.

The textbook division between lyric, dramatic monologue and epic is helpful but flawed; the genres do not separate out with such distinction.

Narrative poetry is probably our oldest form of poetry. It has its roots in the oral tradition of ancient cultures long before there was paper to write on or ink to write with.

There are three primary forms of narrative poems—epics, ballads and straightforward narratives. They differ in length and style but all share fundamental elements and use a narrator to tell the story.

Epics usually have a larger than life hero as the central character and emphasizes moral lessons, customs and traditions.

The Ballad is a narrative poem meant to be sung.

Straightforward narratives are what are mostly written in the modern and contemporary world, rhyme and metrical considerations hardly emphasized.

But all forms contain these narrative elements: character, setting, conflict, plot.

There is a beginning, middle and end. Sometimes there is only one character, setting may be implied rather than obvious, conflict may be internal rather than external, plot is how the narrative points are arranged to make the story understandable to the reader or listener.

Fo'c's'le Yarns Thomas Edward Brown, 1998 FO C S LE YARNS presents four of T E Brown s best Yarns uncensored for the first time These narrative poems were originally published in 1881 in an edition Brown called an emasculation of his best work George Eliot Max M ller Francis Thompson and W H Henley admired his work yet he was eventually dismissed as too Victorian These original texts demonstrate the inaccuracy of this characterization with their bold treatment of sex and their dramatic inclusion of the rough give and take between the yarnspinner and his shipmates in the forecastle The frankness of the Yarns makes them a significant expression of Manx experience and culture as does their close imitation of the dialect The interplay offers a vivid picture of men trying to understand women in terms of their own stereotypes limited experience and remoteness from domestic life while sailing the sea The editors provide a brief introduction and copious explanatory notes identifying allusions and Manx customs and places      Fo'c's'le Yarns Thomas Edward Brown, 1889
