

Dear Mom + Dad,

I have spent my whole life striving to be a better person because of you two. From the time I was very young, I can remember receiving unconditional love from both of you, and I have always tried my best to return that love and make you proud. It is because of the unwavering commitment you made as parents that I have turned out to be a decent person.

I have never been the best at expressing my feelings to either of you, and have found myself on more than one occasion keeping my emotions inside for fear of disappointing you or making you upset. It is my sincere belief that all people should be caring and accepting toward others. They should also be true to themselves and live in alignment with the core of their being. In order to observe these basic truths, I feel the need to break down some barriers that I have created within myself and allow you to see the person that I am, truly and wholly, because you are my family and I care about you deeply.

I have always felt I should have been born as a girl. In this modern day, some people call that "transgender." I have felt this way since I was very young, and I have done my very best to resist it and suppress it for as long as I can remember, thinking the feelings were wrong and unimportant and that they'd go away. Maybe you had some indications when I was young, or maybe-
